BOB JONES University

SPRING 1991

Students travel to Washington, Wall Street

Ninety BJU students traveled to Washington, D.C. for the International Conference on World Evangelism, which featured several veteran missionaries and displays from 20 mission boards. In addition to the Conference, the students were able to spend much of their free time in witnessing and sight-seeing around the city.

The University Business Association traveled to New York for a week on Wall Street. The business majors were able to get in and see firsthand the workings of business professionals. The group spent a non-stop week, seeing everything from the New York Stock Exchange to the New York city skyline by night.

Matt Edwards featured at Peace Center gala

Matt Edwards, a senior piano performance major, performed with other world-renowned musicians at the grand opening of Greenville's new Peace Center for the Performing Arts. He performed Piano Concerto No. 3 by Prokofiev with the Greenville Symphony Orchestra. Matt later performed Rachmaninoff's 2nd Concerto in Columbia, S.C. with the South Carolina Philharmonic Orchestra.

About the cover:

These girls turned an assembly room into their own little Disneyworld for their society outing. Each society has two outings each year, one dating and one stag.

Nicholas honored for service

Mr. Chuck Nicholas, coach of the Bob Jones Academy forensics team, recently received a plaque for distinguished service from the National Forensic League. The award was presented in recognition of fifty citations of service achieved by Mr. Nicholas. He is one of only 85 coaches to receive this award since 1925.

Academy debate team wins . . . again

Bob Jones Academy's Forensic Team won a school-record five first place trophies in a tournament in Charleston, S.C. The team also captured 11 other awards enabling them to win the overall sweepstakes trophy at this tournament for the third consecutive year.

Come camp with us!

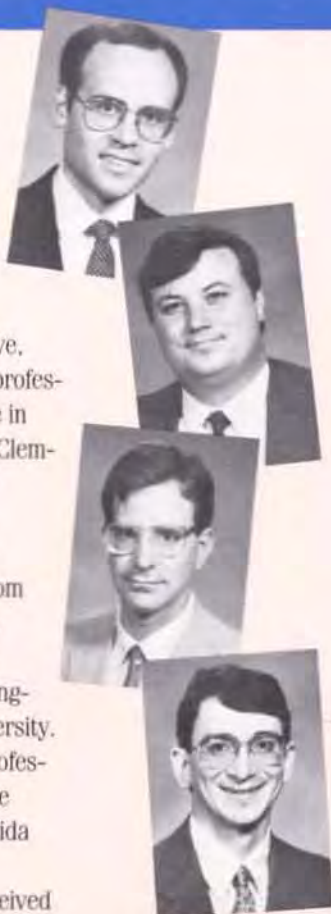

Summer's on its way and BJU has plenty to help keep you busy. The University offers a variety of camps for young people—sports, speech and drama, music, nursing, criminal justice, home economics, and science. Or the whole family can come along for a Peace-Full Vacation. For more information, call (803) 242-5100, ext. 3120 or return the card in the center of the Review.

Faculty and staff receive advanced degrees

Several faculty members have recently received their doctorate degrees. Dr. Bill Lovegrove, physics and engineering professor, completed his degree in computer engineering at Clemson University. Dr. Dave Brown, math professor, received his doctorate in mathematical sciences from Clemson as well. Dr. Dan Hurst, English professor, earned his doctorate in English from Ohio State University. Dr. Paul Overly, music professor, received his doctorate degree in music from Florida State University.

Linda Weikoff has received national certification from the Nurse's Association of American Colleges of Obstetrics and Gynecology as an Inpatient Obstetrics Nurse. Certification is granted to only a few nurses each year who complete the required courses and pass a rigorous exam.

Graphic design major wins cash award

Tom Bonnema, a senior graphic design major, won $500 in a competition sponsored by the Thermometer Corporation of America. Tom designed a rainbow scene that the company will reproduce on one of its patio thermometers, and was presented with the award by Phil Reeder of TCA.

Join us for Bible Conference

Join us March 17-22 for our annual Bible Conference. This year the speakers will include Dr. Rod Bell, Dr. Les Ollila, Dr. Ian Paisley, Dr. Monroe Parker, Dr. Robert Shelton, and Rev. Ronald Van Hee. An added feature will be an estate-planning seminar by BJ grads John McLario and Joseph Helm, Jr.

Other events include three performances of Verdi's opera Il Trovatore on March 12, 14, and 16; and Let's Get Acquainted Days and the College Prep Success Seminar for prospective students from March 23-25. For more information on any of these events, send in the response card in the center of the Review.

Three students killed in crash

Three BJU students were killed and a fourth was injured in a one-car accident as students headed home for the Christmas holidays. The accident occurred on I-40 in the North Carolina mountains.

Jonathan and Sharon Joiner, from Freeport, Illinois, and Youssef Khoury, a WORLD Fund student from Jerusalem, Israel, were killed. Waleed Rishmawi, also a WORLD Fund student from Israel, survived with minor injuries. A memorial service was held January 11 after the students returned to school.

Schroeder featured at Soulwinning Conference

Dr. Bill Schroeder, pastor of the Oak Forest Baptist Temple in Oak Forest, Ill., spoke in chapel during the University's Soulwinning Conference. The annual event, held each year before Christmas vacation, is to encourage and educate the students as they witness during the Christmas holidays.

BJU grads in space? Well, not yet, at any rate, but the jobs of this brother and sister help make space work possible.

Rene Harter Flood and Carl Harter, both BJU grads, work for Lockheed Missiles and Space Co. in Sunnyvale, California. Rene works as a software engineer; Carl works as a buyer.

"The work is challenging and fun, but the best part of the job is to see the software you've been working on for months and years actually in use and fulfilling its purpose," Rene says. Her duties include software design, coding, integration, test documentation, user training, and on-line technical support.

And Rene's work couldn't go on without Carl's help. "I procure printed circuit boards that are used in flight applications," Carl says. "In other words, I buy things that Rene's program uses."

Carl's wife, their father and their uncle also work at Lockheed, so the family has stayed very close.

As long as Rene can remember, she has been fascinated by science and math. Carl, on the other hand, dabbled in science, but found his niche in business. When they began looking for a college to continue their education, their parents and others encouraged them to check out BJU.

Space... the Final Frontier

"It was always a given fact in my family that we children would attend college," Rene says. "I chose something related to physics based upon my love for math and my admiration for my father and youth director who both were engineers."

Carl, who is one year older than Rene, graduated from BJU and went on to California to get his masters degree in business administration.

"We only went to a Christian school for five years, so our time at the university was very valuable," Carl says. "BJ really showed me the value of a Christian education."

"It would be difficult to define the impact that those years at Bob Jones have had on my life," René says. "The principles and skills I learned there have become a part of me. I use them in my day to day life at home, church and work."

Flood, whom she married in 1986. They now have a son, Charles III, and together they run a bus route to nearby Alviso, California.

Carl worked in a Christian school in San Francisco for a while, which whetted his appetite to teach young people. "I do have a desire to go back into a Christian high school," he says. "Right now I'm teaching sixth grade boys in Sunday school, and I love teaching."

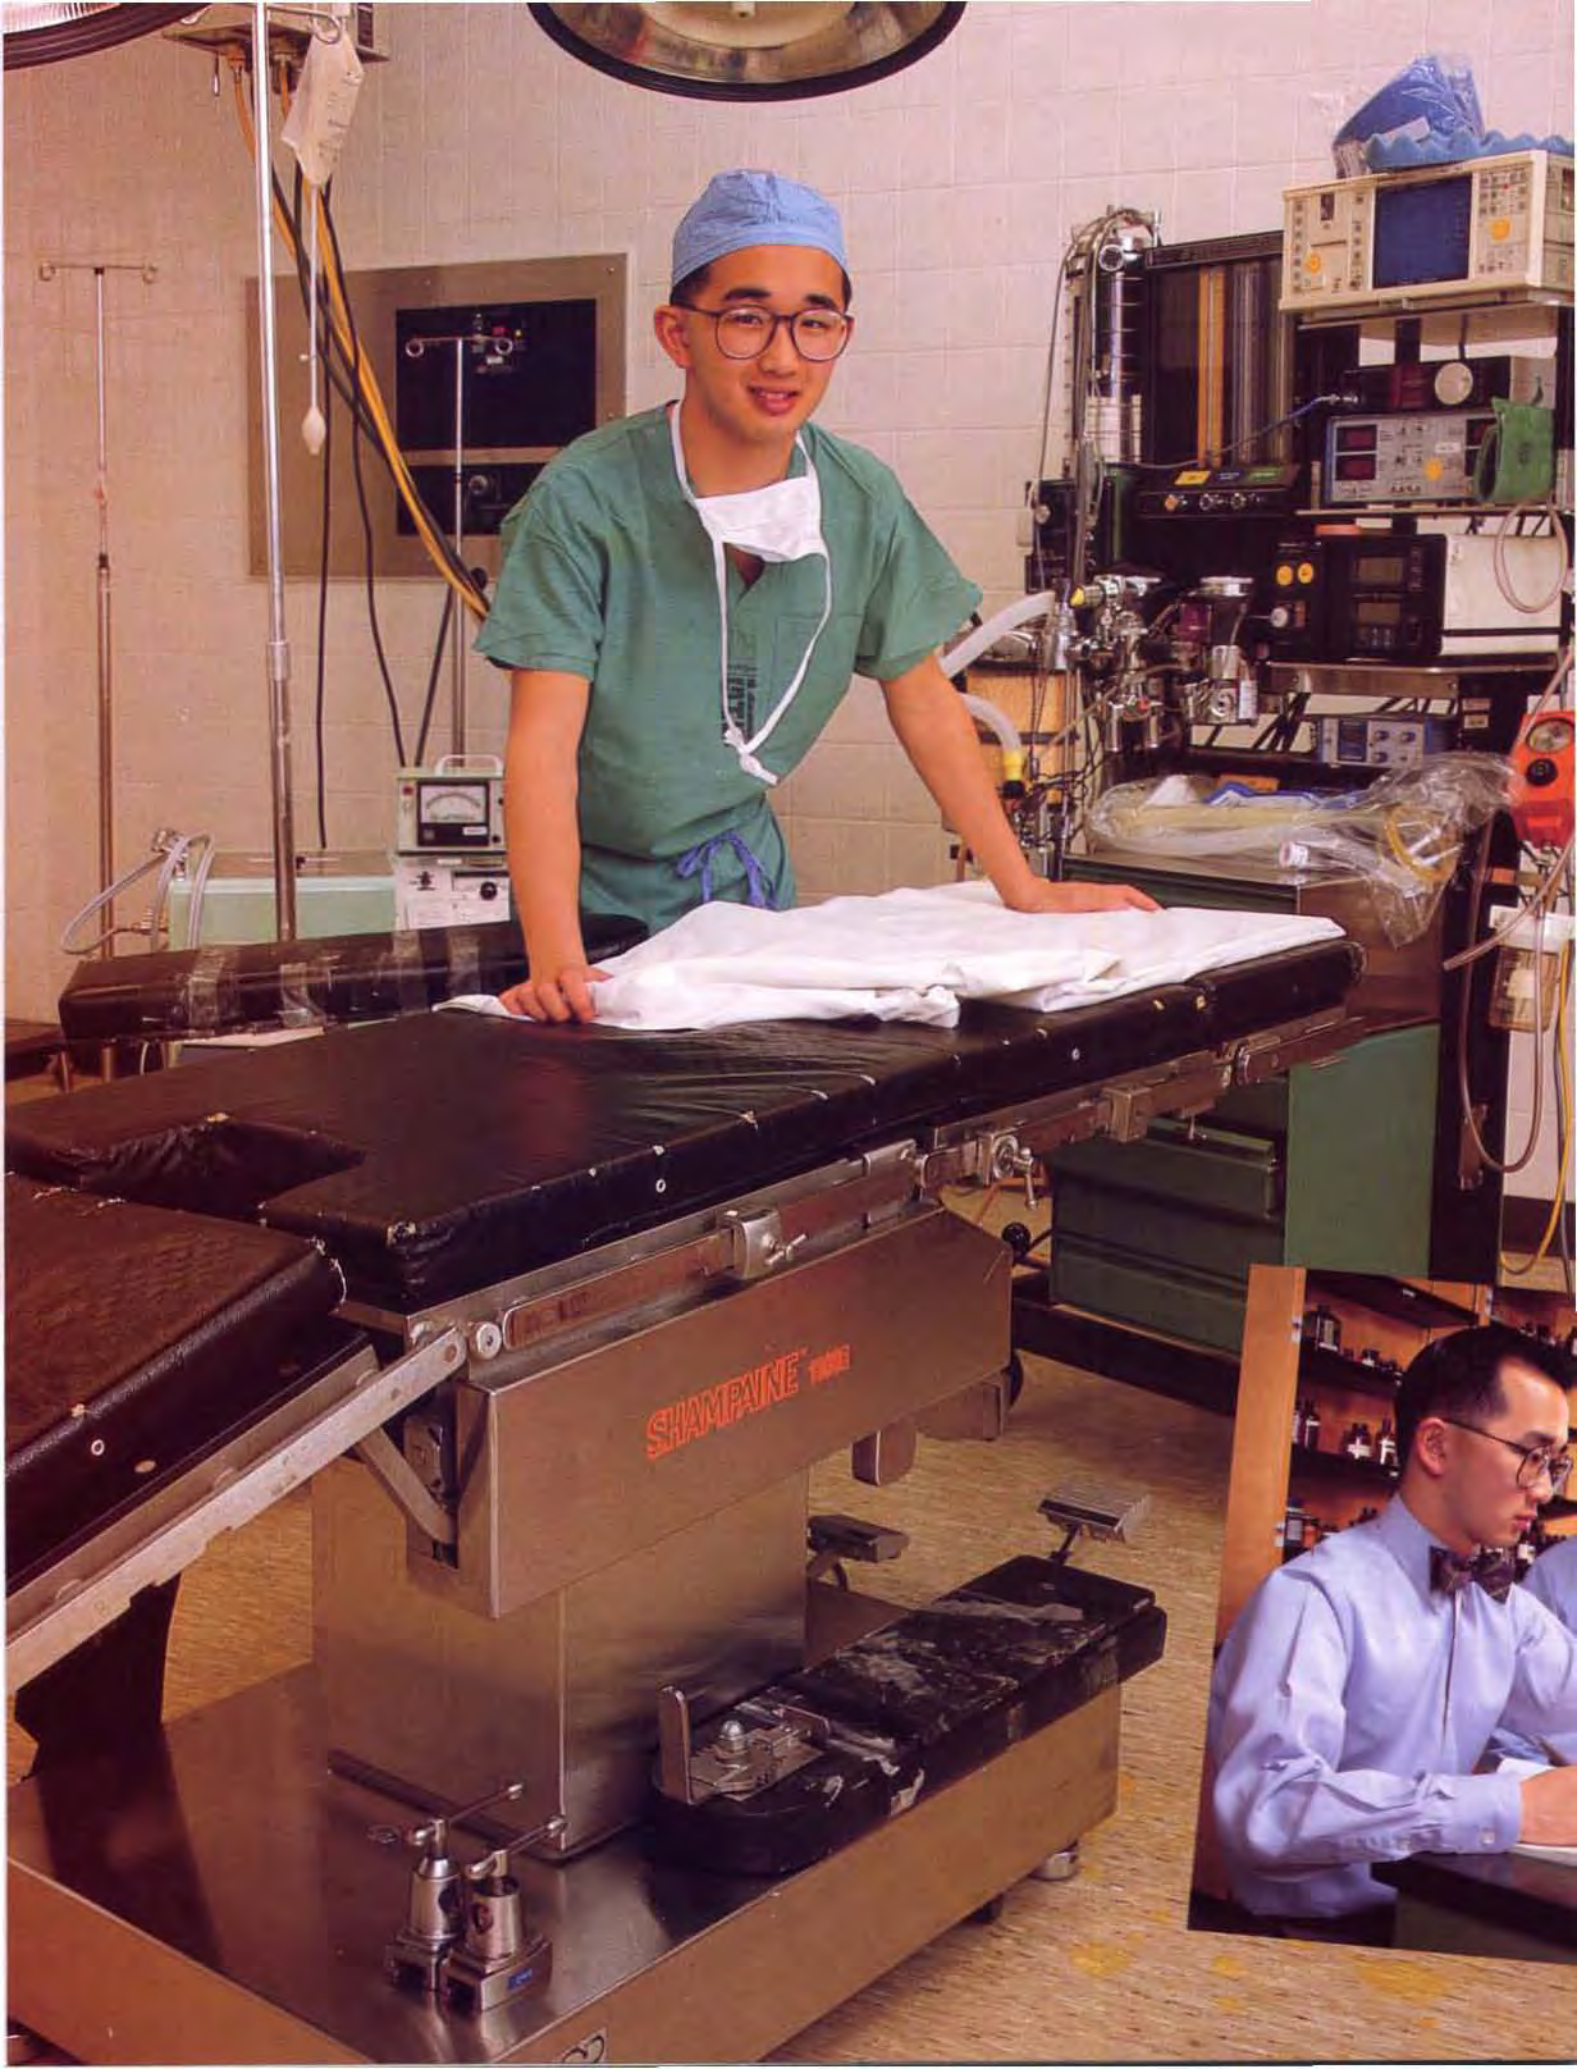

Carl's work at Lockheed takes him all over the United States on business trips. He works on projects like the Hubble Space Telescope and now has begun work for a satellite called Space Station Freedom.

"The Lord has blessed me with a wonderful job at Lockheed," René says, "where the work I accomplish is important to the company, and as a defense contractor, to our country. But much more important is the eternal impact I can make for the glory of God in fulfilling His will for me as a wife, mother and bus captain."

"We both like what we're doing," Carl says. "We just want to keep moving forward and taking on new projects. It is important to keep your options open, and most of all—never stop learning." ■

After René graduated, she began applying to several companies for a job. When Lockheed offered her a ground systems software job in California where her family lived, it was an opportunity too good to pass up.

Not only would she be near her family, but she also would meet her husband, Chuck

"Tsuei, Tsuei, Tsuei," chanted the crowd of students gathered for a weekend basketball game. A new battle cry? No, it's the name of three brothers who made a distinct impression during their years at BJU.

That particular game was three years ago. This year Matthew, the youngest of the Tsuei (pronounced "Suey") brothers, is a senior majoring in pre-med. But that is a rather trite summation for the unique heritage Matthew possesses.

"My parents were born in China," Matthew says. "My mom moved to Taiwan when she was young, but my dad escaped just before the Communists took over."

Matthew's parents went through college together in Taiwan. His mother was saved during high school in a Pocket Testament League crusade. "She witnessed to my dad and gave him a Bible. He was saved while in the army." They came to America to obtain their master degrees and married while in graduate school. They decided to remain in the states and received their U.S. citizenship in 1973.

Matthew's mother maintains contact with her parents, who still live in Taiwan. However, his father has quite a different story. "He had no contact with them for almost thirty years, since his escape from China as a young boy.

"In 1979, after a year of prayer my dad decided to write a letter back to the old address to see if they were still there," Matthew says. Somehow, they got it and wrote him back.

"My dad's boss arranged a business trip for him, and he was able to spend almost a week in China with his parents." They started reading the Bible during that week, and he arranged for a local Christian to hold a weekly Bible study with his parents, and now, the whole family is saved.

Matthew's family had a definite influence on his college choice. "Late in my senior year of high school, I finalized my decision to go into medicine. My parents strongly encouraged me to choose a Christian college, and there aren't that many Christian colleges with a good pre-med program. Everything I knew about this program was good, so I chose Bob Jones."

It didn't hurt that both of Matthew's brothers graduated from BJU: his oldest brother, Gaylord, is a youth pastor in Minneapolis while studying for his M.Div. at Central Baptist Theological Seminary; Tim is a pre-doctoral student in electrical engineering at Duke University.

Dr. Tsuei, I Presume

haven't yet covered." As a tribute to the school's pre-med program, BJ students score above the national average on the MCAT and have been accepted into leading medical schools across the country.

Matthew has been accepted by Wake Forest University and the University of South Carolina. "I'm still waiting to hear from Vanderbilt and the University of Minnesota, but I'm leaning toward Wake Forest right now."

Pre-med at BJU is a notoriously difficult major, but Matthew has performed well. "To make it, you have to know how to read fast and comprehensively, and you should take as many sciences and maths as you can in high school. Once you get to college, you have to be serious about your studies; it's a pretty tough major.

"You learn first to manage your time well—to know what it takes to get the grades. You go with the view that if you sacrifice a little now, it will be worth it later."

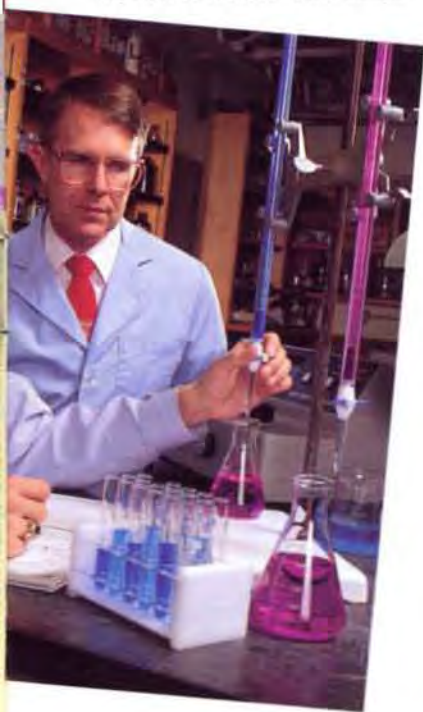

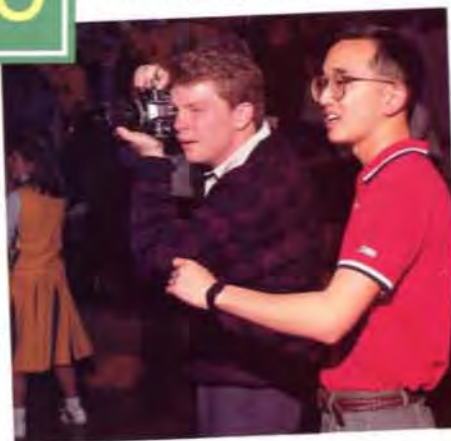

And that's the voice of experience. During the second semester of his junior year, Matthew averaged 24 hours per week in required classes and labs, at least 4 hours per day of homework, plus 2 hours each day devoted solely to studying for the Medical College Admissions Test (MCAT).

Matthew took his MCAT last April. "It was a very tough test, covering all the biology, chemistry, and physics that you've had—and some you he says. He plans to go into the field of orthopedic surgery, which usually requires a five- to six-year residency.

This year has been a little easier for Matthew. In addition to his work scholarship job as an usher, he has had time to work as the sports editor for BJU's yearbook, The Vintage, which requires planning the pages in his section, going to games with the photographers, and proofreading, proofreading, and more proofreading.

What's the greatest lesson Matthew has learned here? He answers the question quietly. "God gives whatever intelligence we have. Anything we do is not from our own strength—it is from the Lord." ■

Have you ever noticed how your interests dictate your outlook on life?

Drs. George and John Matzko know where they stand as Christians, but George's chemistry background and John's history interest give them a view of life from different vantage points.

"Chemistry is an observational science," says George, chemistry professor at BJU. "The Bible is also based on observation. Some people are pessimists, some are optimists, but the Christians should be realists. They should live in the world as it really is."

His elder brother of five years agrees, but John, being a history professor at BJU, explains that Christianity is the only historically based religion.

"For instance," John says, "when the children of Israel crossed the Jordan, the Lord said, 'Get the stones out of the middle of the river and pile them here. When your kids ask about the stones, you tell them what I've done.'"

Brought up by loving, Christian parents in Westmont,

New Jersey, George and John learned early another basic principle for life: to do right.

"Our mother is a remarkable woman," George says with a grin. "She had the attitude that either we would do what was right, or she would wipe us off the face of the earth!"

"My mother very strongly wanted me to go to a Christian college," John says. "so I came to BJU because they had a good music department." Interested in singing and playing the violin and viola, John started out in music, but eventually he gravitated toward history.

George, however, had his life planned in ninth grade. "I'm one of the few people who came to college and never changed my major, but went all the way through with the same plan."

Their diverse interests involve them in a variety of extra-curricular activities. John and his wife, Rachel, have enjoyed working for the National Park Service at Arlington House outside Washington, D.C., where they dress up in nineteenth century garb and give talks about Robert E. Lee. John has also been able to assist archaeologists on a dig in Flowerdew Hundred near Hopewell, Virginia.

Naturally, the brothers' families are very close. George's three children, Kristalyn, 13, Katie, 11, and Paul, 6, and John's son, Austin, 13, spend time together, and John and George enjoy working at their family cottage in the mountains of North Carolina.

George studied at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill last summer. His research there netted a micropotentiostat, a device for measuring small amounts of electric current, for use by BJU chemistry students in their senior research projects. He and his wife, Darlene, enjoy working with the students and have been able to travel with nine mission teams to Canada.

"A lot of students worry before they come here about BJU not being accredited," says John, who is also the pre-law advisor. "But our students go on to law school and do fine." And John and George have done "just fine" in their graduate studies—John has a Ph.D. in American legal history from the University of Virginia and George has a Ph.D. in analytical chemistry from Clemson University.

"Our chemistry majors have been very successful as graduate students," George says, "but really, as far as I'm concerned, we've lost out if they're just good chemists and we can't do something to get them into the battle for the Lord, for something that really matters for eternity."

Although their philosophies of life vary in style, their goals are the same: life is temporal, and only what's done for God will last. ■

"Ye have not the love of God in you" (John 5:42).

The Lord Jesus spoke this rebuke to some people who were very careful about their religious standards and practice. The inference is clear. He is looking for the love of God in us, and He does not always find it in those who, by their outward appearance, would seem to say they have it.

Here at the University we deal with young people whose standards seem to say they love God. But do they? When traveling, I sometimes run into Christians whose lifestyles are far from what they ought to be, but who possess a zeal for the Lord and a hunger for the Scriptures. Let me relate a recent experience.

A female flight attendant noticed a Christian book I was reading and commented about how much she enjoyed that author. When I asked if she was a Christian, she enthusiastically replied in the affirmative, noting that she had been saved just one year previously. All she wanted to talk about was the Lord and her Bible study.

There were many evidences that hers was a transformed life, especially her desire for the Word. Her lack of a fundamental church was the result of not knowing where to turn, and I was able to help her. However, I was startled when she revealed that her "second career"—dancing—was doing better than ever before. There was neither the time nor the opportunity to speak to her about the inappropriateness of that pursuit for a Christian. She did, nevertheless, assure me that she wanted her life to be ruled by the Scriptures; and whenever the Holy Spirit showed her from the Scripture something in her life that was contradictory to godliness, she wanted it out. If that sincerity remains, I am confident that as she grows in grace, she will grow out of dancing.

There is more hope for her because she searches the Scriptures (John 5:39) than for a well-bred, well-taught Fundamentalist Christian young person who has "not the love of God in him" and could care less about conforming to Christ as He is revealed in the Scriptures.

Fundamental churches and schools are full of young people who stand in the right place, conform to the right practices, live by the right principles, but whose souls are dead. They are hardened to Scripture and argue for the quality of their Christianity on the basis that they do not dance or do certain other worldly things.

It is not worldly practices that separate good Christians from bad ones. It is whether they have the love of God in them. The love of God in us causes us to search the Scriptures, which testify of Him. As we do so, we grow away from the world, and as we grow away from the world, our hearts are increasingly tender and warm toward Him who saved us.

It is the absence of that warmth and tenderness toward Christ that bothers me about Christians today. I see instead professing Christian young people who are indifferent toward the Scriptures, deaf toward the voice of the Holy Spirit, devoid of love for Christ, and smug in their separation. If one of those should stand beside that flight attendant in the presence of the Lord, I wonder who would receive His greatest approval. Neither is what he ought to be. One is standing in the wrong place, but facing the right direction. The other stands in the right place already wrong and with no conviction about it.

If you are a Christian young person who wants to be all you can be for the Lord, and you are searching the Scriptures because you have the love of God in you to such a degree that you want the Scripture to reprove, rebuke, and exhort you, Bob Jones University is the place for you. We want that for you too. God has provided this school to be good soil for you to grow in. Come, and be planted here. ■

Help for H.E.L.P

HELP! That's what it took to get the H.E.L.P. Conference off the ground and in the air.

The 1990 Home Education Leadership Program, a first for the University, had a simple purpose—to provide help to parents who teach their children at home.

Many people accepted the offer for assistance; over 3500 people from 45 states and 5 foreign countries arrived at BJU on June 4. During the week, they attended workshops, lectures, exhibitions, and activities blended to give them a "week [that] far exceeded expectations," as one guest wrote. The University also ran camps for the kids that came along with their parents.

So where did the help come from that made the conference such a success? The faculty and staff of BJU. As Mr. John Luck, conference coordinator, says, "What was impossible for me became feasible because they were so willing to help and do anything that was necessary. The conference worked because everybody worked."

And that's exactly what happened. Where else would you see the deans and administrators serving as ushers? Or department chairmen cleaning bathrooms?

Since so many families came to the conference, it took a lot of organization to make sure everyone had a good time. The faculty and staff jumped into the gap left in the work force by students gone home for the summer; offices and classrooms were exchanged for kitchens, gyms, and nurseries. In fact, the nursery alone required 125 workers, and the day camp crews supervised over 1700 kids in various activities. The dining common used 25 people just to assist guests with their trays, drinks, and children during the meals.

These helping hands kept working even after everyone else was asleep for the night. For example, Bill and Gail Yost, Dawn Watkins, and Anne Smith made nightly runs through the dormitories emptying trash, restocking paper products in the bathrooms, and tidying up where ever it was needed.

The conference was a great success according to those who attended. In fact, most indicated that they hope to return to the next conference, to be held June 3-7, 1991.

One guest wrote, "I have been humbled by the servant's heart exhibited by your entire faculty and staff. I have seen nothing but hearts of contentment and love for the Lord which have ministered to me far above the academic information I received." That was the true success of the H.E.L.P. Conference. ■

Beat the Catch 22

Want a job? Get experience. Want experience? Get a job.

Doesn't seem like there's any way out, does it? The way to get the best jobs is to have experience, and nobody wants to pay someone to be trained. So it figures you will have a much better chance of getting a good job if you already have the experience.

BJU offers that experience, built in to many of the majors. Here are just a few examples of the actual internship programs at BJU.

Cindi Goldfuss,

a print journalism major, did her internship with the Greenville Piedmont, one of Greenville's two large newspapers. She had articles published several times each week, giving her great experience and a stack of clips to take with her on her future job interviews.

Amy Biggs, a graphic design major, worked for Perez Design Associates during her internship. Her projects included, among other things, design and layout work on the Friends of Free China newsletter, which will look good in her portfolio.

Brian Mullen, a broadcast journalism major, worked at Greenville's NBC affiliate, Channel 4.

The radio and television majors also do internships at local television and radio stations. Some of

Brian's camera work appeared as background footage during local weather reports.

Business and radio and television majors both have opportunity to polish their sales skills in the sales internship class, which sells advertising space in campus media (the radio station,

WBJU; the Calendar of Events; and the campus newspaper, The Collegian). Here

David Townsend discusses space in

The Collegian with the owner of a local sporting goods store.

BJU nursing grads are constantly in demand, partially due to the excellent hands-on training they receive as part of their major. Here Summer Foster cares for a patient at Greenville Memorial Hospital.

Richard Terhune, like all elementary and secondary education majors, spends a semester student teaching at a local grade, middle or high school. These 5th graders, at Alexander Elementary School, are obviously happy—probably because they are missing class for the picture. Richard learns how to solve classroom problems and practices his teaching under the direction of an experienced teacher.

Shawn Ward, a criminal justice major, gets hands-on training in the field as he works with the Greenville County Sheriff's Department. The interns ride with the deputies, observing and helping. Last year, a BJU intern received commendation for rescuing a deputy during an arrest. ■

COLLEGE FINANCING TIPS

by Roy Barton, Director of Financial Affairs

Paying for college, especially in today's economy, is a frightening thought. We hear all sorts of figures, usually into five, and sometimes six, digits. It's not a pleasant thought to think that a college education in a few years could cost the same amount as a house.

To help you sort through the jungle, I have included a small worksheet with this article. To determine an approximation of how much it will cost to attend Bob Jones University in the future, just follow the directions.

The worksheet, adapted from Money magazine, assumes that you are starting from scratch with no money saved for college; that college cost increases will average 6 percent annually; and that your investments will earn 8 percent after taxes.

1. Number of years before college _____
2. Present annual room, board and tuition $6480
3. Figure the future cost of the first year of college (multiply line 2 by the figure in column A below) _____
4. Figure the total cost of four years of college (multiply line 3 by 4.69) _____
5. Figure the amount you need to invest each month to save that amount (multiply line 4 by the appropriate figure in column B, then divide by 12) _____

Years to college	A	B	Years to college	A	B
1	1.06	.926	11	1.90	.056
2	1.12	.445	12	2.01	.049
3	1.19	.285	13	2.13	.043
4	1.26	.205	14	2.26	.038
5	1.34	.158	15	2.39	.034
6	1.42	.126	16	2.54	.031
7	1.51	.104	17	2.69	.028
8	1.59	.087	18	2.85	.025
9	1.68	.074	19	3.03	.023
10	1.79	.064	20	3.21	.021

If college bills are only a couple years away, don't panic and put money into high-risk investments hoping to make up for lost time. In fact, the sooner you need the money, the more conservative your investments should be.

Also keep in mind that you won't need all of the money at once. Costs will be spread out over four years of college, and BJU has one-, two-, ten- and twelve-payment plans for paying for each year's fees. The sooner you start saving for college, the less of a financial burden it will be when the school bills start coming in.

NEW

Inspiring, singable music from SOUNDfORTH

Looking for fresh, enjoyable music for your church or school? SoundForth, the new music division of Bob Jones University Press, can meet your needs for vibrant choral and instrumental music.

SoundForth is publishing three series of choral music:

- SacredSounds—sacred choir music suitable for the evangelistic service, the worship service, or the Christian school

- ConcertSounds—generally nonreligious choral music, including patriotic and heritage songs, appropriate for a variety of performance settings

- FestalSounds—medium to advanced sacred choral music, suitable for concerts, festivals, and special occasions

From the first release, you can choose from twenty choral octavos, including two ConcertSounds selections ("A Cowboy's Home" and "Shenandoah"), two FestalSounds arrangements ("Psalm Twenty-Three" and "'Tis Midnight, and on Olive's Brow"), and sixteen SacredSounds arrangements.

SOUNDfORTH

Choral Club
special offer

Don't miss a beat! Sign up now to receive all the latest releases from SoundForth. Three times a year (April, August, and December) you will receive ten to fifteen brand-new octavos and a demonstration cassette.

Satisfaction Guaranteed Or Your Money Back

At Bob Jones University, we've put our money where our mouth is with our new "You've Got To Love It" Guarantee!

We'll give you your money back. . .

Every Christian college says it's the best for you to attend. That's a natural outgrowth of believing strongly in what you do. At Bob Jones University, we go one step further. If you don't like us, we'll give you your money back—no questions asked! Here's the fine print:

If, for reasons of dissatisfaction with your education, you withdraw at any time during the first semester from the first day of classes and before the first day of final exams, we will cheerfully refund 100% of your tuition for the first semester.*

You won't be disappointed. . .

About 9 out of 10 students in our freshman class come back as sophomores. We think that's great. We also think it shows we're serious when we say that BJ is the most "livable" and satisfying Christian college you'll find.

Give us a try, you've got nothing to lose. . .

The quality of our academics, the beauty of our campus, the warm spiritual atmosphere, and the fervent zeal of our students to win the lost make BJU a school you should consider. Our guarantee makes it easy.

Call 1-800-BJ-AND-ME today for complete details on the "You've Got To Love It" Guarantee. Also ask for your FREE Personal Opportunity Profile outlining your choice of our more than 100 undergraduate majors. We guarantee you'll like what you see!

BOB JONES University

*The Opportunity Place. . .
God's Special Place for You.*

*Guarantee applies only to first-time freshman dormitory students. Room and board charges not included.

"Stands without apology for the old time religion and the absolute authority of the Bible."
